Extract C: Walmart and China

Some global companies are willing to negotiate with trade unions, whilst others try to avoid them. US company Walmart , the world's largest retailer and owners of Asda in the UK, has been known to stop operating in some countries rather than have to recognise unions.	1
With over a billion people and rising prosperity, China is an irresistible market for the world's largest manufacturers, distributors and retailers. Some of these large companies, such as Walmart , McDonald's and FedEx , have adopted an anti-union stance in the countries in which they operate.	5
In China, however, Walmart has signed 'collective bargaining' agreements with the All-China Federation of Trade Unions (ACFTU). The Federation has 193 million members and is a monopoly, given that no other trade unions are allowed to operate in China. Officially, signing the agreement was a voluntary action on Walmart's part. However, firms which refuse to sign such agreements are likely to face many difficulties in gaining access to Chinese markets. Walmart gets a say in the appointment of the trade union Chairman at its workplaces. This official invariably has close links with the Chinese government. So now, if Walmart's management in China wants to close stores, lay off employees, change workloads or amend working hours, it must consult ACFTU. In effect, this gives the Chinese government a say in the running of the business.	10 15
ACFTU discourages strikes at a time when working conditions in China have come in for international criticism. ACFTU has also been accused of failing to represent its members properly because the Chinese government prefers to promote business investment and business growth at the expense of workers' rights. However, there is a view that any negative economic effects of trade unions are outweighed by the positive effects of trade union activities on wages, discrimination and exploitation. For this reason, it is argued, the UK government should encourage businesses, wherever they operate in the world, to engage fully with trade unions.	20 25

Extract E: Getting gas to market

In the EU as a whole, there are over 72 million domestic consumers of piped natural gas. The largest consumers of piped gas are Belgium, France, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands and the UK. In the UK, six energy companies control 99% of the market for natural gas. British Gas, the privatised utility, dominates the market with over 50% market share. There are no signs, at present, of any significant new entrants to the market. 1

The EU Commissioner for Energy has called for the 'Europeanisation' of energy policy. The Commissioner argues that it is necessary to assure all EU consumers that their energy sources are safe, competitive, efficient and sustainable. To help achieve this, the Agency for the Cooperation of Energy Regulators (ACER) was launched in 2011 as an agency of the EU. At present, it has an advisory and coordinating role across the EU, rather than a regulatory one. In the UK, The Office for Gas and Electricity Markets (OFGEM) is the main regulator for piped natural gas. 10

Consumers might have doubts about the effectiveness of regulators such as OFGEM. In August 2011, price increases averaging 18% were announced for piped natural gas, while general inflation was 4.5%. Observers noted that, while wholesale prices were volatile, domestic retail prices tended to follow them upwards and then became 'sticky' and unlikely to follow them downwards. One problem is that there is very little storage capacity in the UK. OFGEM does not directly regulate prices, and is far more concerned with the ease with which consumers can switch between suppliers. 15
